Dear Hiring Manager:

My name is Zhaobo Wang, I am a student at McMaster University and I am majoring in electrical and computer engineering, where I have learned a lot of interesting things, I have taken a lot of programming classes, and I also have taken a lot of courses in circuits and controls. I did a lot of interesting projects with programming and joined the MacRobomaster robotics club in my freshman year when I first learned about the whole process of web development, including the front-end and back-end. Through my studies at school and my self-study time, I found a technology path that I like best, JS + PYTHON/NodeJS.

By now I have four years of web development experience, including one year of full-time coop time. I have worked for three companies, the first job was in college during the summer, mainly to learn the technology and understand the daily development process. The second job was in the summer after one year, I went to an Internet company named Tongcheng-Elong, mainly doing online travel business. Our group was mainly responsible for smart travel, I was responsible for solving bugs and modifying UI issues raised by the product manager. The main front-end framework I used was Vue, which was the first time I used this front-end framework in the company, but I quickly understood how to use and perform Vue through self-learning. The third company is SAP, I worked as a COOP student, mainly involved in SAP HANA Tooling Development Team, which is a large group with more than 50 people, mainly using Javascript (SAPUI5) and Python (Django). I participated in the company's SP15 Hana Cockpit Patch Release and was responsible for the development of a component, during which I gained more experience working with product managers, UA team and QA team. I learned what a standardized development process is, I wrote design docs and a lot of test code. I really enjoyed my time at the company, I got involved in various activities and met some friends.

Please take a look on my resume and my personal website (www.jimbowang.space) to know more about me. I really love web development and have great enthusiasm for technology, have strong learning ability, As a passionate individual and student devoted to my studies, I believe that I am a great fit for this position in terms of my experience and personality.
